NELLIE WHITE.

Nellie White might as well understand first as last that she is in for a good deal of abuse as well as the "Pen." Perhaps she is already aware of this; if not she will not long remain in ignorance of the fact. Nellie White is the young woman who was escorted to the Penitentiary on Thursday afternoon by the Marshal in pursuance of an order by the Judge of the District Court committing her as for contempt in refusing to answer certain questions propounded to her by the grand jury. These questions were intended to ascertain if she had "gone through," as the querist expressed it, any religious marriage rite or ceremony with Girard Roundy, bishop of Wanship; and if so, was the marriage "plural or celestial" for time or eternity, or both? To learn if she had ever been in the Endowment House, and if she knew who "are the officiating priests" there. Nellie White was brought in from Wanship for the express purpose of having these questions propounded, and after they were propounded she was silent, and the prison has been prescribed, both as a punishment and a tongue-loosener. For her silence she will be abused as Belle Harris was abused last summer, and blackguarded as Belle was blackguarded. And yet will any fair-minded, honest person say that Nellie should answer the question? or would any such person respect her more for answering? would he not rather think less of the woman for replying? The presumption of the law is that she is not married to Bishop Roundy, the law always presuming the negative to be true in matters of this nature until the affirmative is proven. [The grand jury] presumes that she was married to Roundy, and some newspaper readers also presume that she is the bishop's plural or celestial wife, for the case has been the subject of newspaper publication and comment. And suppose these last two assumptions are absolutely correct, can anyone ask the woman to reply to the condumns propounded by the inquisitorial body? If she has married Roundy, she knows that to answer the questions affirmatively means simply a long term in the penitentiary and a heavy fine for her husband, and it ought not to be expected that she would voluntarily do anything tending to injure him; also, if she is his plural wife, to answer in the negative means perjury, with its attendants of conviction, fine and imprisonment for herself. Does anybody desire that she will commit this crime?

People who can look at this matter dispassionately, and without prejudice or bias, cannot help feeling that Miss White or Mrs. Roundy, as the case may be, is pursuing the course that every true and brave woman would pursue under similar circumstances. It is the only course left open to a woman in her situation who is actuated by the natural instincts and social sentiments of womankind. We are saying nothing of the action of the court; it may be in the line of good law, or it may not; but there can be only one opinion as to the course of Nellie White, and that is that she is proving herself a true woman in bravely accepting punishment rather than be guilty of doing something against which her conscience revolts and which her womanly instinct abhors.

If juries, courts and prosecutors think they will make any headway against polygamy by the tactics that has been pursued in the Belle Harris and Nellie White cases, they will live to learn of their mistake. They can fill the penitentiary with contumacious witnesses, and put government to the expense of guarding and boarding half the plural wives in the Territory, and yet they will be no nearer a conviction than when they began the raid. The policy is a bad one to pursue.

These wives will not testify against their husbands, any more than wives in monogamy will seek the punishment of their husbands; nor should they be asked or expected to do testify. The law does not contemplate any such proceeding; it is rank injustice, or worse, downright cruelty to woman, and nothing can be gained from it. Illegitimate and irregular methods seldom, if ever, result in good, though local courts and prosecuting officers have usually been slow to learn this fact.

"REPUTATION, IAGO, REPUTATION."

It doesn't generally pay to wager; because, if you win, you get something for nothing; and if you lose, you have been cheating yourself. In the face of this profound assumption we are prepared to make the wager of a sum equivalent to the size of the average federal officeholders honesty. District Attorney Dickson has asserted that he will stake his reputation on the probable success of his prosecution against the Mormons. This being true, our wager is that he will sink into the tomb minus the "immortal part of him," as Cassius puts it. Such a failure, of course, will be attributed to Mormon defiance, but that song has been chanted so long as to become a disgusting monotony of painful and discordant notes. The fact is, just as big, just as large-brained men have tried the same thing and without exception and have split upon the rock. Of course, they have all quit with well-lined profits, the lining coming from some unforeseen source, and this may also be the happy fate of the present district attorney. Be that, however, as it may, the gap he proposes to fill is too big for Mr. Dickson entirely. The fact is, unlike a sound lawyer, Mr. Dickson seems to think the law can do everything. It cannot keep one man from killing another, despite the fact that the highest punishment is promised those guilty of the crime. People will submit to punishment rather than do certain things, and you cannot make laws to cover it because such a law would be unlawful. The Mormon people do not defy laws; they are powerless to do so; but they do enjoy their great American privilege of testing the validity of those laws, and to oppose them by every legal measure, and they are powerless to use any others. All this is true, the harpings of cavaliers and blackmailers and the reputation to Mr. Dickson to the contrary notwithstanding.

ELECTRICITY AND GAS.

Boston furnishes some interesting and useful points regarding electric lights. There are in the city 386 of these lights on the streets and public squares, the cost for maintaining which is met by the Corporation. In the city proper the Brush system is used; the Weston has been adopted for the suburbs, and the principal squares are lighted by the American Electric and Illuminating Company. The estimate is that each electric lamp takes the place of 34 gas lamps; the gas costs the city $1.75 per thousand feet, the cost for each lamp with four-foot burners being $26.97; the cost of lighting, cleaning and repairing each lamp was $735, making the total cost of each lamp $84.32. The cost of 34 gas lamps, each burning 4 feet of gas per hour, and in use all night, is given as $111.64. The average cost of each electric light displacing 34 gas lamps was $237.25. Experiments have been made on a few of the streets with gas-cluster lights, burning 30 feet per hour. These have cost the city $149.29 each for the year, against the $237.25 for the electric light, and it is claimed by many that the clusters gave a steadier light than the electric. However, notwithstanding the difference in cost in favor of gas, the city has made money by the introduction of the electric light, because the price of gas has been forced down to reasonable figures.

St. Louis has a religious editor whose vigorous language suggests great possibilities for the western writer who will take a course of instruction in that city. The gentleman's name is Rev. John G. Boyle, and he refers to the editor of an opposition paper as "a product of pus," "a drooling imbecile," "a scab," "a skunk" and "a scapless, characterless cur."

It is noted that the newspapers in commenting upon the withdrawal of Bismarck from the Prussian ministry, as announced in the cablegrams the other day, give greater importance to the incident than it deserves, the presumption being that he has practically retired from affairs of state. The fact is, Bismarck's retirement from the ministry is of very little consequence, as he still retains his connection with the Imperial government and continues Chancellor of the German empire. If the Governor of New York held the office of county commissioner, and should resign the latter office his act would be similar to that of Bismarck, who is as influential and powerful to-day in the affairs of Germany as when he was Prussian minister.

Transcontinental Association.

Chicago, 22.—The Transcontinental Railway Association resumed its session this forenoon. As a condition to joining the proposed money pool the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe road urges that the Union Pacific withdraw from the tripartite alliance. Whether this will be urged to the point of breaking off all negotiations will probably be determined at the session this afternoon.
